

Dress Code 'Experiment'

Regarding your editorial (June 3) about Hamilton High relaxing the school dress code:

You said it deserved an "A" for effort. Well, I guess then that my school, Cathedral High School, deserves not an "A," but an "AA" for first effort, since our school started a program identical to Hamilton's except that we have been doing it since the beginning of the school year (September), and no one came and patted us on the back for "testing a theory . . ."

JOE L. ROLDAN
Los Angeles

Hamilton High School (Times editorial, June 3) is not in West Los Angeles. It is in Palms, the pioneer community.

Palms had a post office in 1874 when Los Angeles had 8,000 population. Los Angeles annexed Palms May 22, 1915. The location of Hamilton High School has been legally, physically and historically part of Palms for more than 80 years.

DAVID I. WORSFOLD
Palms

The Times welcomes comments of all viewpoints from readers. Letters should be brief, to the point, and on the subject. They should be signed and dated. The Times reserves the right to edit letters for clarity and brevity. Letters may be published or withheld at the discretion of the editor. The Times is not responsible for the return of unsolicited manuscripts.