Oneonta Military School Absorbed; to Be Operated for High School Boys

The Page Military Academy has taken over the Oneonta Military Academy and will operate two fully equipped schools on two different campuses under the name Page-Oneonta Military Academy. The Page School, known as the "big school for little boys," on Cochrane Ave., Los Angeles, will be for the education of grammar school cadets, according to Maj. Earle R. Vaughan, commandant.

The Page-Oneonta Military Academy, whose spacious Culver City campus was formerly occupied by the Pacific Military School, will be for the instruction of high school youths.

Fall semesters for both grammar and high school youths will begin Sept. 15.

The Culver City campus has been completely renovated and overhauled since it was acquired from Pacific Military Academy. The spacious new modern buildings, located on a rolling hillside overlooking the athletic field, have been redecorated within and without during the summer. The athletic department is fully equipped for polo, swimming, tennis, golf, football, baseball, basketball, track and other sports.

Major Vaughan has spent the summer personally selecting a highly trained faculty. Parents are invited to inspect both schools and visit with the registrar to get further information concerning the academy.

Page Military School has had 34 years experience in educating smaller boys, while the Page-Oneonta Military Academy is fully accredited to colleges and universities.
